Attachment Theory is a widely researched area of child development. Attachment begins in infancy, however, it is well recognised that it effects how we relate to others throughout our life. This course is designed for anyone who works with, or is in regular contact with Children and Young People, including Parents and Carers. The course will offer an introductory level understanding of some of the latest research into Attachment Theory. The key focus of this training is to offer practical approaches to supporting Children and Young People in environments such as schools, child care settings, youth services and one to one sessions.

Benefits this course will offer:

- We will take you beyond theory by offering a host of practical strategies and methods to enable you to develop further, positive relationships with children, young people and families.
- You will leave with a clear understanding of the key elements of Attachment Theory that underpin the strategies and methods that you will be equipped to use individually or in group settings.
- Develop your insight into how Attachment Theory impacts on relationships throughout life to offer a wider understanding of human behaviour and relationships from a parent carer's perspective.
- Gain a range of clear indicators to help you identify when children require additional support.
- You will have the opportunity to learn in a high quality safe training environment, where learning is enjoyable.
